The National League of Postmasters, established in 1897, is a non-profit professional management association representing the nation's Postmasters, as well as other postal employees and retirees. The LEAGUE has been in the forefront of efforts to provide consistent, affordable and predictable postal services to rural and urban areas of the nation.

The LEAGUE is particularly concerned with the proposed post office box service fees and the impact of increased box fees on mail service to rural postal customers and on individual post office revenue.
